Course Topics:

Introduction to Crime and Criminology (3 hours)

This unit will introduce important terminology regarding the sociological study of crime, provide a brief overview of the history of criminology (e.g. classical criminology, positivism, the Chicago School, and contemporary criminology), and explain what criminologists do in their field of study.

Studying Crime (3 hours)

This unit will explore methods of studying crime and the current and historical trends in criminal behavior. Important data sets will be covered and critiqued for their strengths and weaknesses and will include: the Uniform Crime Report (UCR), National Incidence Based Reporting System (NIBRS), The National Crime Victimization Survey (NCVS), and Monitoring the Future (MTF). Emphasis will be placed on distinctions between cross sectional and longitudinal data. Other methods covered will include observations, ethnography, and experiments. Trends in various types of crimes will be discussed.

Victimology (3 hours)

This unit will explore the subdiscipline of victimology. Material covered will include the effects of crime on victims (e.g. economic, stress, fear, antisocial behavior), characteristics of victims, social factors associated with higher risk of victimization, and theories of victimization (e.g. lifestyle theories, deviant place theories, and routine activities theory).

Theories of Crime

Rational Choice Theories (3 hours)

Unit will cover the rational choice theory of crime connecting back to the classical school of criminology. Focus will be on the rationality of crime, how rational choice theorists explain criminality, and how these theorists suggest we respond to crime (e.g. general and specific deterrence).

Trait Theories (2 hours)

This unit will explore the foundations of trait theories and emphasize the sociological components of these theories. Unit will cover arousal theory, evolutionary theory, the role of genetics in crime, and Psychology trait theories. As this is a sociological focused class, sociological critiques of these particular theories will be emphasized.

Social Structural Theories (4 hours)

This unit will explore the structural dynamics that produce criminality. Emphasis will be placed on the role of poverty, discrimination, and other structural elements that reduce opportunity. Specific theories covered will include social disorganization theory, social ecology, theory of differential opportunity, and the strain theories (e.g. Robert Merton's anomie and Agnew's general strain theory).

Social Process Theories (4 hours)

This unit will explore criminal behavior as part of a social process. Attention will be paid to how people are socialized into criminal behavior and that criminal behavior is learned. Specific theories will include: Sutherland's Differential Association theory, Sykes and Matza's Neutralization Theory, Bandura's Social Learning Theory, and Hirschi's Social Bond Theory.

Social Conflict Theories (3 hours)

This unit will explore critical criminology theories. Students will be introduced to Marxist theory and how it has been applied to criminology. The unit will also explore the Peacemaking Criminology, Convict Criminology, and Restorative Justice approaches situated in critical criminology.

Developmental Theories (3 hours)

This unit will explore developmental approaches to understanding criminality. The life course perspective will be examined (e.g. problem behaviors, age of onset, pathways to crime, and adolescent-limited and life course persisters). Unit will also explore Sampson and Laub's Age-Graded Theory and Gottfredson and Hirschi's General Theory of Crime.

Crime Typologies

Violent Crime (3 hours)

This unit will explore the causes of violence (e.g. psychological, evolutionary, and socialization, exposure, cultural, and substance use) and the various types of violence (e.g. rape, homicide, assault and battery, robbery, and Intimate partner violence). Focus will be placed on the legal definitions, trends, and correlates of each type.

Gangs (3 hours)

This unit will explore pathways into gangs, types of gangs, and policy responses to gangs.

Political Crime & Terrorism (3 hours)

This unit will cover types of political crimes (e.g. election fraud, treason, espionage), their nature and goals of political crime, and various forms of terrorism.

Enterprise Crimes (3 hours)

This unit will explore crimes of business enterprises, organized crime, and other economic crimes. Focus will be placed on white collar crime including the definitions, the extent and causes, and the consequences.

Public Order Crimes (3 hours)

This unit will focus on laws and behaviors criminalized for moral reasons. The unit will cover debates about morality and social harm of these offenses. Specific crimes covered will include: sex offenses, prostitution, pornography, and substance abuse.

Cyber Crime and Technology (3 hours)

This unit will cover the role of technology in the facilitation of crime. The unit will cover cyber theft (e.g. computer fraud, copyright infringement, identity theft), cyber vandalism, cyber terrorism and the societal effects of cyber crimes.

Criminal Justice System (3 hours)

This unit will provide an overview of the criminal justice system. The origins and structure of the American justice system will be explored as will specific models of justice (e.g. justice model, due process model, rehabilitation model, and restorative justice model). Unit will include a discussion of justice reform debates.

Punishment and Correction (3 hours)

This unit will explore the historical and contemporary models of punishment and correction. This will include a brief history of the prison model (including the Pennsylvania/ Walnut Street Model and the Auburn System), overview of current prisons and jails system, overview of probation practices, and various other forms of sanctions (e.g. fines, forfeiture, bail). The goals of the criminal punishment will also be covered.
