Program Plan Development Instructions

In order to develop a Program Plan that represents the needs of the community, you will need to collect input from a variety of sources in preparation for writing the plan. Sources of information include:

Moreover, staff, faculty, and administrators should be given a valuable as well. Lastly, members of a community advisory board should be consulted.

After collecting this input, a plan can be drafted and then again reviewed and revised.

While this process might be more time-consuming, it will ultimately result in a plan that better serves the mission of the college.
